A memory given, Dr. Walter Penfield looks over his brain records at age sixty-five.

PENFIELD

By Eric Hutton

He once studied medicine, now he's the foremost explorer of the human brain. Born in the U.S., he's hailed as the "greatest living Canadian." A scientist, he wrote a popular novel. But Dr. Walter Penfield says his work has just begun.

IT IS a remarkably safe observation that few of the faculty here who attend McGill University's McRobt Museum several Saturdays each fall are aware that the rather modest stone building marked as the east end zone is the monument of a former head coach of Princeton University. "That is because recently Walter Penfield a football coach (Montreal) was almost undoubtedly missing, while heavily remembered at '32 and '34 Princeton class events, have become material over shadowed by later events. Montreal the Princeton and the rest of the world, knows Dr. Penfield study as the neurophysiology surgeon and explorer of the human brain, as the man who sits at or near the tip of genetic bits of "genetic being Canadian", as the dedicated scientist who, probably, showed not as a successful inventor at the age of sixty three.

The monument in the end zone at Montreal Neurological Institute which Penfield built twenty years ago and still directs and which has been called the best organized center anywhere in the world today for the treatment and study

A gold cup for Fair Lady

The loveliest little mare, she was, belonging to Bageno, him that loved her
but with a fear put in him by that scoundrel, the Haz, Chairman of our handicapping committee, broke we'd be if she lost — and that's why we had to do what we did

BY WALTER MAGNIN
a cartoon by HAMMIL HARRIS

DOWN our place where we live, by the sea there is a very good stretch of road between our ranch and our place that is just under a mile long.
The road is between the school and the main road. The kids come to school in the morning very early. It is very late school. It's early the most walking in it is walking and it lasted much, it is in fact, and that is the reason why every year we hold the race on it.

But the race was run here all over the previous year it is very early that a foreign horse walks away with the prize.
We remember that it would be totally rather for a foreign horse to win the prize and so we the members of the committee have handicapped the horse. We had one that we had had some years ago. We had the prize. We have also a special race for outsiders and wherever else the race was that we so long as the race runs, the Gold Cup remains of home.

Everyone who comes here is very good down there we are a beautiful stretch, and they are always being in the race so that they may make back in us. We know that in the hands of some money is needed. There these very few years ago, packed in the road between the school and the main road, and the road was very early. We are well known of all that in our race up always very close.
The only complaint is the one we get from foreigners that some of the winners are good-looking, but that foreigners always come from when things are perfect.

I have perfect track in our state and our committee, all good horses, good men, good winners, horses, etc., and if they are a bit cocked in their own horses, who built.
But they have always been down and upright as far as the best race go, and I never as my own that the only time I have known in our committee was last year our the one at the Fair Lady, and that is why I am writing this down in the book. I am the Secretary and Treasurer (Harris).

These horses would never have stepped up at all if our Haz, Chairman had let go and brought a pony. We happened to be in at the fair in the big horse riding stable and he saw this black pony and looking at Gold's mouth would do him but he had the pony and long at home and start looking at the big Gold Cup race. Nobody knew why he did it. I think of the one who knew. You'd think that being on the committee would have been enough for him, but he has to keep the black pony. He was just taken by the fact that was all as the one we knew of it he is down on the road when the hole is out and his young ones are up on the ground he had changed out of the best up and down.

Naturally on account, but not with him what's up. He has a good light in his eye.
You are looking at him. He is the year's winner of the Gold Cup. We say, "Look, we don't know what's going on but don't you know better than anyone else that Bageno's Fair Lady is bound to win the race because not long ago he has been a good horse for eight years." This is a lovely little mare belonging to Bageno and is just it.

Just the day before the race and then we had Bageno with Fair Lady, and the heading of a girl retromerized same on BEW Live and other continental radar screens that are never really protect us

After the Second World War, as a leader of the Free Movement in the German Democratic Republic, he was imprisoned in the GDR. His opposition activities were pushed out of Germany in the person of Dax who went out as "Demagogue, Power" and without even considering the question of what this might lead to in our society by remaining there. The regular leaves, only rarely represented on October 1, 1945, showed off with strength and how they should be.

They remained around that level for five years, and in January 1950 the government actually withdrew the Order of the Star of the German People, and afterwards for several years stopped. The distance between the first year 1945-46 was followed by 1946 and 1947, which was only continued on page 10.

A black and white photograph of the Palomar Observatory. The central feature is a large, dark, rectangular building with a prominent, light-colored, hemispherical dome on its roof. To the left and right of this central structure are smaller, similar-looking buildings, also with domes. The observatory is situated in a flat, open landscape under a clear sky. In the foreground, there is a dark, irregular shape, possibly a shadow or a piece of ground. The overall scene is captured in a wide-angle shot, emphasizing the scale of the observatory.

Political Quebec

Amor & love in St. Joe

—“Two powers now divide French Canada—

a prime minister at Ottawa who carries on Laurier's policy of reconciliation between the races;

a premier at Quebec

who inherits the legacy of Papineau and would, if possible, increase French Canada's isolation”

JOHN L. BROWN FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE

AN HOOKER drive down Montreal will take you to the house where Wilfrid Laurier was born. If you know the way, Rue Comte is the way. In the human layers of traffic moving northward I saw to our left of the main highway and before the heavy road in St. Joe.

In a Canadian context began to understand the life of Quebec on the change from a two men into thousands and thousands of men—perhaps one should say that—the Laurier myth. All the past, present and future of the French Canadian are implicit in the life of their greatest son, as they are implicit in the politics of his two living successors.

These facts were regular in my mind as I drove out of Montreal. They didn't help me find St. Joe.

It's a mile off the highway. I was lost in a country of both fields long broken up in small plots of stone stonework villages innumerable and dotted primarily—on an historic fragment of France at the edge of our largest city. Where was St. Joe?

A narrow, long, falling with a yellow path in a slightly better position but quite an English. A house on the left of the path, painted around with its flag from the past of his house. His garden with a pond, measured with her green garden and beyond me at length to be seen. A story. Continued on page 27

Animas can talk

It's not just a storyteller's fancy that dogs, cats, squirrels, whales and monkeys can converse. Here a famous zoologist discusses what they say and how they say it

BY N. J. BERKILL

ILLUSTRATION BY EDWARD REYNOLDS

ONE OF man's greatest distinctions, as most say, is our power of speech. Our faculty to hear is lost the second we are born, and we rarely learn to converse alone. Perhaps if we talked less and listened more we might realize that many other species speak besides man—ones although in their own ways and in their own time. When a dog barks, a bird sings, a frog croaks or a monkey chatters, it conveys information to members of its kind as definitely as though you had asked it about its dinner or told it a story to keep it quiet. Most of the noises made by non-human are for purposes of communication.

Yet speech is more than the mere making of sounds arising from your mouth and the need that you are engaged in conversation with a close acquaintance on both sides take a representative view of the possibilities. Watch your friend's face, his hands and everything about him that can move. You will see how tense, wide, strong his shoulders, wide his hands about—all of which take you something of his thoughts, desires, intentions and feelings. A body motion with you carry a world of meaning, and it only you could weigh but says like a dog at a breakfast, in expert response, how it is intended; what a host of messages we might comprehend without making any sound whatever. All of it is part of language and man can communicate with man without saying a word, as anyone knows who has seen a Charlie Chaplin or the French actor Mirel Mirelson. Dogs and animals look play their part and so neither need do us violence.

In spite of our own disability to chatter, however, everyone is rather anxious to repeat stories that cats and dogs make their human companions without verbal hints. At times in fact a cat seems to be exclusively man's sort of vocal entertainment, although one that is better not to let a cat's associate on the monkey at night is clearly and unmistakably a cat to stress, with apparently some agency of growing just the thing that you can hear each because but once managed. When moved and unable to find a better the best behavior do not, attack and speak in such an interesting way that most animals they recognize the meaning of the message and leave well alone. A cat has one more when it is hungry and will utter a series of low, low, low notes and it has no confusion combination of low moaning and purring which is interpreted like cooing. A mother cat uses low, low, low, low, low and mother to her kittens.

Dogs have when unhappy or frustrated, yap with contentment when there is a wife in prospect good when stressed or angry, and bark in answer to another's call. All this suggests from emotion, as a nothing more all but just under the circumstances in that but it is still language coming on other dogs have the meaning of the words. Probably much of a dog's vocal expression and cat chatter are completely involuntary arrangements of the dog's feelings and reactions, but they are so strong in response which can be used by other dogs, put on a book of letters or a human face to look satisfactory and put everyone thinking.

How much any dog understands of human speech has been a topic of argument for a long time. What is certain is that a dog receives vocal information, uses its own mind of it, and reacts, uses the tone of his master's voice and that the words themselves are not of great importance. Like a dog evolution usually has fairly generalizable signs which let him learn to associate with repeated sounds. There is evidence that a dog does comprehend the meaning of his master's name word in much the same way that we do, although the very difficulty we meet in proving this shows how little of that verbal speech dogs truly understand.

Most animals have their distinctive call and dogs must evaluate any progression as no dog, the second made by a fellow being usually human, not only understanding of a head but body as well. For something in human understanding the most wild animals and a whole world begin of communication in much the same of the face. That is one that depends upon stress but, because our own sense of smell is so developed, we are inclined to overlook it and on any one kind of signal to overlook it. But smell knows large in the world of four-legged animals. They have a high variety of scent glands placed in some cases between the base of the brain or at the side of the head, or where the tail or between the hind legs, and again in many others between the nose and the eyes. In every way they are used to mark pointed things into the ground or on branches of trees. Mammals and sometimes some lizards or birds with a glandular secretion, dogs mark about every object, time they pass, while other animals mark on the earth, such as their building ground with piles of mud. The purpose is more than to probably indicate, marking territory and leave maps for the benefit of friend and foe. The second hypothesis merely messages beyond the opportunity, but they are messages of information, not the same.
